The Truth about Self-Harm

Self-harm is a deeply personal and often misunderstood issue that affects people of all ages and backgrounds. Many believe it's simply a cry for attention, but in truth, it's usually a coping mechanism – a way for someone to manage intense emotional pain, numbness, or a sense of loss of control, and find temporary relief from feelings that seem unbearable.

The Truth about Self-Harm
Understanding and supporting those who self-harm

Self-harm is a deeply personal and often misunderstood issue that affects people of all ages and backgrounds. Many believe it's simply a cry for attention, but in truth, it's usually a coping mechanism – a way for someone to manage intense emotional pain, numbness, or a sense of loss of control, and find temporary relief from feelings that seem unbearable.

This webinar aims to shed light on the reasons behind self-harm, the emotions that drive it, and the ways we can respond with empathy and support rather than judgment. We will explore the psychological, emotional, and social factors involved and discuss practical approaches for helping individuals find safer ways to cope with distress.
